

Special workshop for health professionals:

Communicating with non-English speaking clients

Interpreting Wellington and Regional Public Health invite you to a special workshop on how to use interpreters in a clinical context, in order to meet the requirements of human rights and sign language legislation. This workshop is one of a series offered under the Regional Action Plan for Refugee Health and Well-Being.

Come and join us for a varied programme including an interpreting demonstration and interaction with your colleagues. Morning tea will be provided.

The programme will give you the chance to hear about the experiences that other health professionals have had with interpreters. We'll help you identify the risks of using clients' family and friends as BYO interpreters, and will give you some tools for working with interpreters to get the best possible communications with your clients.
